WHONNOCK'S VALIANT HEROES

Among the Whonnock boys who have made the great sacrifice are numbered Pte. Robert Fletcher, Pte. Arthur Norman Hackney, Robert H. Harris and Pte. Alfred Sorenson.

Like many a English-born Canadian, Robert Fletcher hastened at the outbreak of war to join the colors in defence of that land he loved so well. He was attached to the machine gun section of the 47th, fought around Ypres and the Somme and from wounds received in battle died on the 29th of August, 1917. His widow still resides at Whonnock, Maple Ridge.

Arthur N. Hackney, another English-born Canadian, had a long war record. He fought through the South African war. At the outbreak of the war he joined the New Zealand forces, was wounded and discharged as medically unfit. Later he enlisted with the 72nd Seaforth Highlanders, fought in Egypt, Gallipoli and France. He was killed in action at Rosleres, August, 1918.

Born in Wales, Robert H. Harris, too, early answered the call to arms and on the declaration of war left for England, where he joined the Duke of Wellington West Riding Regiment as second lieutenant. Fighting in Egypt, Gallipoli and France, he was killed in action on the Somme front, September 29th, 1918.

A Fraser River fisherman from Norway was Alfred Sorenson. When the war broke out, he joined the 46th Battalion, fought through several battles and was killed in action, October 27th, 1917. His father, brothers and sisters live in New Westminster.

REMEMBERING THOSE WHO DIED IN THE “GREAT WAR”

THIS ISSUE of Whonnock Notes contains an assemblage of documents relating to ten men whose names are shown on a memorial plaque dedicated in Whonnock in 1921.

Here are “Attestation papers” of the Canadian Expeditionary Force from Library and Archives Canada.<sup>1</sup> These forms were completed at the place of enlistment and signed by the applicants to show willingness to serve overseas. Here are also copies of the commemoration records of the Commonwealth War Graves Commission for these men.

These combined records give some information about the men and how they are remembered on the battlefields in Europe, but we only learn about their lives leading up to their unfortunate death in what is know as “The Great War” from other scarce sources.

We know something about the lives in Whonnock of half of the men mentioned on the plaque. We know nothing about the connection with Whonnock of the other five. Still, in 1921, there must have been friends or relatives in Whonnock who cared to have the names of their loved ones shown on the plaque. But we don’t know who these friends or relatives were.

The Maple Ridge cenotaph from 1923 show the names of all but two of the men mentioned on the Whonnock Memorial plaque including Garner under his alias Cromarty. The names of Hannah and Snelling, are not shown on the cenotaph.

In the end, it does not matter. With these monuments we honour the memory of all who fell in that terrible slaughter – named or not named from wherever they came or wherever they lived or died.

Close to 61,000 Canadians were killed during the war, and another 172,000 were wounded. Many more returned home broken in mind and body.

May these notes help to remember them!

I chose not to include these pages.

In 1923 the combined members of the Haney and Hammond Women’s Institute commissioned the Maple Ridge cenotaph with the names of the fallen of Maple Ridge including most of the names mentioned on the Whonnock memorial plaque.

THE HALL AT RIVER ROAD was first known as the “Ladies Hall” and was built thanks to the initiative of a group of Whonnock women who formed “The Ladies’ Club of Whonnock,” as it was officially known in 1911. The society was simply known as the Ladies Club and no one bothered about the apostrophe. The Ladies Hall started to be used without fanfare some time in the summer of 1912.

After the First World War the hall was dedicated to the memory of the soldiers of “Whonnock district” who fell in the 1914–1918 war and renamed “Whonnock Memorial Hall.”

Funds were made available to pay off the mortgage of the hall and later to order a brass plaque with the names of these soldiers.

AFTER THE OLD HALL CAME DOWN the Whonnock memorial plaque was placed on a concrete cairn on the land where the hall had stood between River Road and the Loughheed Highway. For years people gathered there on Remembrance Day until the plaque was moved to its present place in front of Whonnock Lake Centre.

<< The MAPLE RIDGE NEWS, 20 April 1988:

The cairn will be moved to the new Whonnock Lake Centre following a $10,000 donation to the community centre from the Legion. Photo by Brian Giebelhaus.*

* Sidney Cranston was a First World War veteran. He is buried in the Maple Ridge cemetery. His grave marker reads: "Sidney K. Cranston | Private | C.F.C – C.E.F. | 1898 – 1990".

WHONNOCK REMEMBERS ITS OWN

First published in The News – Friday, November 8, 2013

THIS COMING MONDAY, November 11, when the official ceremonies commemorating the sacrifices in the time of war are getting underway at the cenotaph in Haney, a small group of residents of eastern Maple Ridge will start assembling in front of two commemorative plaques at Whonnock Lake Centre.

The Whonnock ceremony is a simple and intimate affair. A minute of silence marks the eleventh hour, and poppy wreaths are placed at the two plaques honouring the soldiers from Whonnock who died in battle in the two World Wars. Also those who died in later conflicts and those who today serve on dangerous missions will be silently remembered.

After that, someone may want to recite John McCray's moving "In Flanders Field." Another may read something else, or tell a story appropriate for the occasion. Those present may decide to sing our national anthem. Then, after a short greeting of friends and neighbours, all will quietly go their way.

This year there will be a small display of war memorabilia, but the most remarkable artifact is without doubt the old brass remembrance plaque showing the names of soldiers who fell in the First World War.

This plaque was once attached above the main door of the former community hall when, in 1920, that building was renamed Whonnock Memorial Hall. Many years later, after the old hall was demolished, the plaque found its way to a permanent place in the front of Whonnock Lake Centre, where a second plaque was added to remember the fallen of the Second World War.

The ten soldiers named on the 1914–1918 plaque were all connected to Whonnock in some way, but for half of the men the association with Whonnock is no longer known. Most likely they were relatives or friends of people living in Whonnock at the time rather than residents. The links with Whonnock of the other five men are well documented.

British-born Robert Fletcher was among other things a real estate agent. He farmed on top of Byrnes Road. Fletcher was so eager to join the overseas forces that he reduced his age to be allowed to enlist. His wife Georgina, a member of Whonnock's Norwegian Lee family, served many years on the board of the community hall. After the death of her husband and the sale of the farm, she anonymously helped pay off the substantial debts of the hall in his memory.

Arthur Hackney came to Canada in 1900 and left the following year to fight in South Africa. He returned in 1903 and settled in Whonnock on land purchased from Ashton Spilsbury. He subdivided part of this land and arranged for access to the new properties—the present Spilsbury Road. In 1911 Hackney moved to New Zealand, and when the war in Europe started, he fought with the New Zealanders in Egypt, at Gallipoli and in France. In 1917, wounded in battle, he was shipped back to New Zealand and declared "... no longer physically fit for war." That did not stop Hackney from returning to France that same year, this time with the Canadians, and he was killed in action just a few months before the armistice. A plaque in the Anglican Church in Whonnock honours his life and sacrifice.

The Whonnock Anglican Church also carries a plaque in memory of Robert Harris who, with his brother James, started farming in 1898 on 130 acres land in Ruskin. Later they ranched close to Whonnock Station on two five-acre lots. In the spring of 1913 Robert Harris married Annette Brown-Clayton in the Whonnock Anglican church.

The following year, after the declaration of war by Britain, the brothers immediately joined British regiments. Like Hackney, Robert Harris served in Egypt and at Gallipoli before joining the battle at the Western Front.

Only a few years before the war started young fisherman Alfred Sorenson came from Norway with his parents and siblings. In 1907 Millie Kirkwood still had tears in her eyes when she remembered her brother, "... he was just not nineteen but so healthy looking and such a good boy. And this Englishman, he came, he was getting young men to go overseas. So this English officer said: 'Well, you should be at war, fighting for your country... you are not a slacker, are you?' And Alfred – that stuck in his crop. 'I am not a slacker,' he said, and he went, and three years later he lost his life."

Sam Roy Garner was related through marriage with Robert Robertson, Whonnock's first white settler. Rejected in Vancouver on his first attempt to join the Canadian overseas forces, Garner re-applied in New Westminster under the alias Roy Cromarty. He was enlisted under that assumed name and sent to France. Charlie Owen – born in Whonnock but a lifetime resident of Albion – told author Ed Villiers that, running in panic through the trench at his first German artillery bombardment, he came face to face with Garner, "... who was calmly sitting on a bench smoking a pipe. A piece of corrugated tin above his head protected him from being splattered by mud. [Garner] removed the pipe from his mouth and said quietly, 'There's no point running from 'em, Charlie. You'll just as soon run into one as away from one.'" Charlie came home to tell the story and he lived to the age of 96 years.

Private Arthur Norman HACKNEY with young Jim Spilsbury.

*Private Sam Roy
GARNER who served as Roy CROMARTY).*

From the minutes of the Ladies Club of 5 April 1916.

"The meeting received a visit from Mr. Wellsted [Thomas P. Wellsted, a resident of Ruskin] who presented to the Club the Roll of Honour of those from Whonnock serving in the C.E.F. illuminated by Mr. Wellsted and framed.

This most beautiful work was presented to the Club by Mr. Wellsted with a request that it be hung in the new post office for a month in order to encourage recruiting."

The "new post office" refers to the post office at approximately its present location. The post office had been in the general store that burned to the ground a few months earlier in 1916.

Also two women are honoured:

Annette C. Browne HARRIS née Clayton was the wife of Robert Hugh Harris. She was one of the war widows who helped pay the mortgage of the hall.

Frederika WILSON, a professional nurse, later lived with a colleague, Katherine Martin in a house on 98th Avenue they called "Wilmar."

WHONNOCK'S ROLL OF HONOUR of 1916 shows more than forty names – not all Maple Ridge residents. Not everyone named served in the C.E.F. either. All names shown on the memorial plaque are included in this Roll of Honour.

Water leaking through the ceiling of the old hall caused the stripes down the middle of the roll.
